We will also have competitions for “done” cultural dances, “zat pwes” and food stalls, product exhibition stalls and boat races. I have been informed that these festivities will be organized on a scale grander than previous years without losing touch with age old traditions. I therefore send good wishes and hope that all ethnic brothers and sisters would be able to participate in good cheer happily.

When the States/Regions were formed after Independence, deliberations were made in the Parliament to designate as Kayin State all the regions where the Kayin nationals were residing. Thus in accordance with the Amendment Act 62 of the 1951 Constitution, Papun region of Thanlwin District was constituted as Kayin State as an initial step. In continuation, according to Act 14 of the 1952 act to extend Kayin State, all the adjacent areas of Thanlwin District such as Kyarin Seikgyi Township, Kawkareik Township, Hlaingbwe Township, Hpa-an Township, and Thandaung Gyi Township were designated as Kayin State as a second step of extension. Again on 1st March 1960, Myawady Township and Kayin State was reconstituted with 7 townships namely Hpa-an Township, Papun Township, Hlaingbwe Township, Thandaung Gyi Township, Kawkareik Township, Kyarin Seikyi Township and Myawady Township.

Thus the 7th of November, the day on which the Union President signed the Amendment Act of the 1951 Constitution to designate Thanlwin District as Kayin State, has been designated as Kayin State Day. Since 1955 we have celebrated the Kayin State Day and this year marks the 63rd year.

If we look back at history, it may be found that 11 Kayin racial groups have been living in Kayin State together with other ethnic groups happily and in friendship since ancient times. However, after gaining independence because of the impact of political instability, there were long years of internal conflicts, as a result of which we were not able to do development works with full steam. Thus, our country lagged behind in many sectors. The states where ethnic nationals live suffered more from the internal conflicts. At this time we are working for internal Peace and National Reconciliation to build a Union based on democracy and federalism.

Therefore, now is the time, for all ethnic Union nationals to take lessons from undesirable experiences of the past and march forth in unity with collective strength and joined hands for the emergence of a peaceful Union.

That is why our Union Government has been exerting strenuous efforts for internal peace and national reconciliation ever since the time we took over state responsibilities. For the emergence of a democratic federal republic we have conducted political dialogues and the Union Peace Conference - 21st Century Panglong for three times. We have now reached agreement on 51 fundamental principles of the Union Accord.

The sounds of guns have now almost fallen silent in Kayin State which has suffered heavily the brunt of internal armed conflicts. Ethnic brothers and sisters and all armed groups living in Kayin State have worked ardently with courage for peace in Kayin State. They have made a bold decision and joined hands to work under the leadership of the Union Government in development projects with vision and enthusiasm. Because of this cooperation, Kayin State is now enjoying the fruits of peace and development.

Kayin State has the Thanlwin river and is rich with waterfalls, mountain streams, caves and the natural beauty of forests and mountains. These are good prospects for developing eco-tourism for foreign and local travelers. Furthermore, this is also an important region for border trade and commerce, being in the south-eastern flank of the country. Presently, since we are about to construct two Thai-Myanmar Friendship Bridges and many border trading posts, this will mean increased job opportunities for the local ethnic nationals.

As the Union Government has been implementing development projects all over the country, it has also been implementing projects for Kayin State development in areas such as transport, education, health, human resources, supply of electricity, development of SME's, and development of eco-tourism. Because of the efforts and cooperation of the local people, I believe that there will be continued sustainable development.

In striving for the transformation of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar into a stable, peaceful and prosperous Federal Democratic Republic, all ethnic nationals and Union citizens need to work strenuously with collective strength, hand in hand and cooperate to overcome all difficulties and challenges.

As Myanmar walks on the path of peace and development, I wish to urge all our ethnic brothers and sisters from Kayin State to continue working hard in unity, with hands joined together, for the emergence of a peaceful, beautiful and developed Kayin State. Furthermore, as I send this Message of Greetings, I pray that we would be able to successfully build the Federal Democratic Republic with the good foundations already laid down for peace and development.

Export of manufacturing sector up by $290 million in October this FY

THE value of exports in the manufacturing sector was worth $487 million last month, which is a significant increase of over $290 million compared with the same period in the last FY, according to data from the Ministry of Commerce.

Myanmar's manufacturing sector is largely concentrated in garment and textiles on a Cutting-Making and Packaging basis, which contributes to the country's GDP to a certain extent.

The CMP industry has emerged as very promising in the export sector. The export value of CMP was only $850 million in the 2015-2016 fiscal year, but export income from the CMP industry tripled within two years, with $2.5 billion in the 2017-2018 FY, as stated at the Myanmar Global Investment Forum 2018 held on 12 September.

Meanwhile, garment producers are eyeing Myanmar for investment because of its inexpensive labour, which sometimes causes conflicts between garment factory employers and labourers, according to market observers.

There are currently over 400 garment factories in Myanmar, employing over 300,000 workers.

Of note, the manufacturing sector is likely to maintain the top position in attracting FDIs during the current FY. — GNLM ■

Rays of hope for peace for our country

To end the decades-long armed conflict is not a simple or easy task. A step by step approach with magnanimous and farsightedness is sine qua non to end armed conflicts, which have continued since our independence in 1948. The task of carrying out three responsibilities: ending armed conflicts, internal peace and national reconciliation, is not easy or simple. But, we are committed to overcoming all the challenges ahead to achieve these goals.

Myanmar is a complex nation, and its complexities are compounded by the fact that people expect the Union Government to overcome all of these challenges in as short a time as possible.

A meeting for reviewing the framework for political dialogue and guidelines to proceed was held at the National Reconciliation and Peace Center (NRPC) on Shwe Li Street in Yangon from 1 to 3 November. The meeting was aimed at seeking suggestions for the framework of a political dialogue, and sending them to the UPDJC meeting for approval.

Participants included members of government and Tatmadaw groups, armed ethnic organizations who signed the Nationwide Ceasefire Agreement (NCA), and political parties.

During the meeting, they discussed methods to negotiate for amending the framework of political dialogue and guidelines for the work to be done.

Two agreements reached at the meeting are: to hold the Union Peace Dialogue Joint Committee-UPDJC meeting every two years and the secretariat meeting every month, and that the two agreements will be submitted to the UPDJC meeting for approval.

The peacemaking process was carried out in the past with a bottom-up approach by holding mass meetings at grass root levels first, then national level political dialogues. The outcomes of the meetings were delivered, step by step, to the work committee and the UPDJC meeting.

But, as of today, a way which works between the decision makers of the groups and suggestions from the bottom is to be practiced as part of the efforts for gaining hopeful outcomes for peace.

The peace process is continuing and the UPDJC is making strenuous efforts for peace, and these efforts can be seen as rays of hope and peace for our country.

All of us basically want peace, rather than war. We want harmony, rather than conflict. This is the aspiration shared by all our peoples: peace, stability, harmony and progress.

This is not a large agenda, but it is a difficult one.

Do quality control by yourself

the initial period.

The written compliance at the time of tender submission is quite impressive as it may usually mention all the good things about the proposed construction. The officials of the tender selection team may have chosen the best and finest tender submission among the contenders. Moreover, they would surely ask the winning constructor to fulfil in accordance with the norm and standard mentioned in the original proposal.

When the construction actually started, each and every step is usually found to be minor, cheaper and smaller than the original submission and proposal. Beginning from the cement to the brick and to the iron rod, the quality is inferior.

When the quality inspector has seen this, he is sure to point out the faulty portion. Some parts could be rectified, but some may not be able to fix it back unless the structure is being demolished. Nothing could be done, but complaining, fumbling and grumbling.

The situation is in dilemma as it could not order to demolish and rebuild again. A constructor may have undertaken two to three construction sites simultaneously, and that if an erratic site is being ordered to rebuild, then the possible consequence of trouble is unthinkable for that particular site.

With lesser supervision, more faults popped up

One might suggest supervising and watching constantly over the construction process, which is not possible under the circumstances. The inspection team, the engineers, and the work charge might be busy in one way or other due to various reason including their social matters. Therefore, constant observation is not possible. The construction work is in progress only in the hands of the unskilled and unprofessional workers.

In some places, the local people come up with full cooperation in the project. They examined the bricks, sands and materials and demanded for quality substances.

They are helpful on their skillful expertise, but not in every step of the construction.

Undertaker has the responsibility

When one could not watch constantly at the construction site, then the faulty portions may grow. It is unclear and confusing to whom it is to be blamed. Based on the accountability and responsibility, the liability lies on the construction company. However, the company usually responded with variety of unacceptable justifications. If it is to be summed up, the actual undertaker has the final responsibility. Perhaps, it is not suppose to be the responsibility of the construction company, but the blame comes upon the quality controlling team. Maybe, it is partly true. The unstable and soft promise given by the undertaker to fix the error has been taken lightly with a feeling of embarrassment or restraint through a sense of delicacy. Things get complicated and mixed up with many people. Some people were sandwiched in the tricky problem, while some got away with profits and benefits.

The guarantee method and system is too bad. The durability of the building is normally given dignity, pride and self-respect in their performance of standard work. The construction company must stand tall and able to defend the quality inspection of the examination team. The company must work into a perfect condition to maintain its reputation and status.

In reality, the inspecting team could come to the site only three to four times, where they could have seen or may not have seen the faulty portions. Perhaps, the team may say or point out nothing due to restraint by the bad feeling of offending. The best solution for that case scenario is to carry out to the best of their ability on the part of the actual constructors making the work perfect.

Another important aspect is that the actual constructors must be firm in telling the main company that only the standard and quality materials would be accepted to meet the agreed design and structure. If the main company asked to use inferior quality for profit sake, it should never be accepted. The actual constructors must maintain their prestige and name. If the company insisted to use minor quality, then the actual implementers should advise the main company to find someone else in such inferior business.

Check quality control by oneself

Naturally, the people are engaging in business for making profits. Normally, eight percent is allowed to gain in trade. If someone wanted more than the norm, then it would never be fair. Regarding the inspection and examination, if there is no fault in the work, it would be the best situation. When the building is perfect at all time, then the name of the constructor would be successful forever.

The work progress is to be examined and inspected not by others but by one own self. Perhaps, one may pass the exam or otherwise. The main reality is to pass one owns examination. If one is not satisfied with its own performance, then one has to repeat to meet one's satisfaction.

Whatever case it may be one owns construction quality is to be examined and inspected by oneself, and embrace greater success and stepped into the aspired destination.

Myanmar Reform Measures to Improve the Ease of Doing Business on Track, says Deputy Minister of Commerce

THE Doing Business Report 2019, published on October 31, 2018 saw Myanmar's "Distance to Frontier" score, which measures Myanmar's performance against the top country in each indicator, improve from 44.21 to 44.72 1 (the top country in each indicator is ranked at 100).

Myanmar's overall ease of doing business ranking (which compares Myanmar to other countries) remained the same at 171.

Each year the World Bank publishes an Ease of Doing Business Report which ranks 190 countries across 10 indicators: Starting a Business; Dealing with Construction Permits;

Getting Electricity; Registering Property; Getting Credit; Protecting Minority Investors; Paying Taxes; Trading Across Borders; Enforcing Contracts and Resolving Insolvency.

Despite the lack of upward movement in the ranking, H.E. U Aung Htoo, Deputy Minister for Commerce and Chair of the Doing Business Reform Working Group (DBRWG), re-mained upbeat.

"Myanmar has improved its overall performance" He said. "However, other countries have done the same or more, which is why Myanmar's ranking remains unchanged.

has done successfully over the last year is put in place a robust framework for reform. I am confident that, the hard work and commitment of all involved, this will bring significant and sustained improvement in the ease of doing business in future years. This is a long term commitment, and we need to aim for continual improvement."

"The prize will be an environment where it will be significantly easier to do business, cutting red tape and allowing businesses to do what they do best. This will send an important signal to investors, both local and foreign, and will help encourage the formation of new companies, creating jobs and lifting people out of poverty."

He said that the measures the government has taken over the last year include: the formation in January 2018 of the Doing Business Reform Working Group, which reports to the Private Sector Development Committee, chaired by the Vice President, H.E. U Myint Swe; the drawing up of a comprehensive reform action plan; the strengthening of inter-agency coordination; the preparation of an awareness strategy to engage the private sector and the public; and the development of a website, which will go live by the end of 2018.

The Doing Business Report 2019, published on 31 October 2018, recognized two reforms undertaken by Myanmar during the reporting period: making it easier to start a business by reducing by half the cost of registering a company (from 1 April 2018); and increasing the reliability of electricity supply and the transparency of tariff information. Myanmar now records and publishes details of every power outage, including time, duration, location and the reason for the outage (planned, unplanned and for load shedding).

"The cut-off date for reforms to be captured in the Doing Business Report 2019 was the end of April 2018", the Deputy Minister pointed out. "This means that a number of re-forms implemented recently are not reflected in this report.

These include: the provisions of the new Companies Law coming into effect on 1 August 2018; the launching on the same date of the electronic companies registry (MyCO), which allows companies to register online; and reductions in the number of procedures to obtain a construction permit and get an electricity connection.

In addition, a new Insolvency Law was introduced into Parliament in October 2018.—MNA ■

Ally of ex-Malaysian PM charged in $63mn graft case

KUALA LUMPUR (Malaysia) — An ally of former Malaysian prime minister Najib Razak was charged with graft on Monday, the latest figure from the toppled scandal-plagued government to be targeted in an anti-corruption drive.

Since its shock victory in May elections, the government of Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad has filed dozens of corruption charges against Najib, his wife Rosmah Mansor and a string of other ex-officials associated with the long-ruling former regime.

On Monday, Musa Aman, the influential former chief minister of the eastern state of Sabah, was charged with 35 counts of graft for allegedly receiving $63 million in bribes while awarding timber concessions. He was one of many entrenched politicians from the United Malays National Organization (UMNO) party to be unseated at the polls by a Mahathir-led reformist alliance.

Musa, 67, was arrested by anti-graft officials and brought to a Kuala Lumpur court where he pleaded not guilty to the charges.

"I will fight this case to clear my name," Musa told reporters as he exited court after being released on a bail of two million ringgit ($479,000).

Musa formerly headed UMNO in Sabah, Malaysia's second biggest state that is rich in oil, gas and timber. He is the older brother of former foreign minister Anifah Aman.

The once-powerful UMNO, the main party in the Barisan Nasional coalition that had ruled Malaysia since its independence from Britain in 1957, has been rocked by desertions after its humiliating defeat. — AFP

Wind farm 'predator' effect hits ecosystems: study

PARIS (France) — Wind farms act as a top “predator” in some ecosystems, harming birds at the top of the food chain and triggering a knock-on effect overlooked by green energy advocates, scientists said on Monday.

Wind is the fastest-growing renewable energy sector, supplying around four per cent of global electricity demand.

Close to 17 million hectares — an area roughly the size of Tunisia — is currently used for generating wind energy worldwide, and researchers warned that developers had “greatly underestimated” the impact the technology has on wildlife.

In new research, an international team of scientists studied the effects of wind turbine use in the Western Ghats, a UNESCO-listed range of mountains and forest spanning India's west coast region and a global “hotspot” of biodiversity.

They found that predatory raptor birds were four times rarer in areas of plateau where wind turbines were present, a disruption that cascaded down the food chain and radically altered the density and behaviour of the birds' prey.

In particular, the team observed an explosion in the raptors' favourite meal, fan-throated lizards, in areas dominated by the turbines. Furthermore, they saw significant changes in lizard behav-our and appearance, living as they were in an essentially predator-free environment.

“What was remarkable to us were the subtle changes in behaviour, morphology, and physiology of those lizards,” Maria Thaker, assistant professor at the Indian Institute of Science's Centre for Ecological Sciences and lead study author, told AFP.

As the levels of raptors fell around the turbines, so too did the rate of predatory attacks the lizards had to deal with.

As a result, the team found that lizards living in and around wind farms had lessened their vigilance against possible danger.

Simulating “predator attacks”, humans in the study could get up to five times closer to a lizard in the wind farm zones than one living away from the turbines before the creatures fled.

‘Be smart with green energy’

After testing, the lizards near windmills were found to have lower levels of a stress hormone, something that must have emerged in the two decades since wind farms were built in the Western Ghats.

Wind farms are known to be harmful to birds, disrupting their migration patterns and causing above average death rates.

Thaker said her research, published in the journal Nature Ecology & Evolution, showed that wind farms replicated the role of the top predator in the food chain by keeping the raptors at bay.

“They trigger changes to the balance of animals in an ecosystem as if they were top predators,” she said.

“They are the ‘predators’ of raptors — not in the sense of killing them, but by reducing the presence of raptors in those areas.”

As man-made carbon emissions continue to rise, Thaker said wind energy was vital in mitigating the effects of climate change.

But with evidence that the impact of wind farms reaches further into Earth's ecosystems than previously thought, she called for greater consideration of the environmental impact of the vital green energy source.

“It took decades for scientists to realise that wind-turbines were negatively affecting animals that fly,” Thaker said.

“We need to be smart about how we deploy green energy solutions. Let's reduce our footprint on the planet and put turbines in places that are already disturbed in some way — on buildings for example.”

Project nears end for sustainable freight, logistics in Mekong

By May Thet Hnin

THE project for Sustainable Freight and Logistics in Mekong countries, funded by the European Union and the German development agency GIZ, is nearly finished, said Daw Pyai Pyai Pwint, national project coordinator of GIZ.

Five countries making up the Great Mekong Subregion, including Cambodia, Myanmar, Laos, Viet Nam and Thailand, have been simultaneously carrying out this project during the term February 2016 - January 2019. The project for the five countries has received financial support of 2.4 million euros. The EU contributed 90 per cent of the funds, while the remaining 10 per cent is supported by German government and the project is implemented by GIZ.

The project focused on safe fuel handling, safely transporting dangerous goods, formulating business plans for small and medium enterprises working freight and logistics, and education about green freight policy, are being carried out.

The Ministry of Transport and Communications and the Road and Transport Administration Department are primarily carrying out this project, and the GIZ has already provided technical assistance to them. Additionally, more than 150 entrepreneurs operating small and medium enterprises had access to trainings, said Daw Pyai Pyai Pwint. A national workshop, "Promotion of Logistics Alliance and Policy Development", was held yesterday as part of this project at the office of the Myanmar International Freight Forwarders' Association (MIFFA). Officials from Mekong Institute also delivered remarks.

Sanga Sattanun, project manager of the Mekong Institute, explained about the website, which contains data and profiles of entrepreneurs from five countries. It was noted that Myanmar freight forwarders require capital to keep up with other countries with advanced technology. Also, another impediment is infrastructure constraints for transportation, said Quan Anh Nguyen, Program Specialist of Mekong Institute, who spoke about policy development. After this workshop, GIZ will submit policy recommendations to the government to ensure a sustainable freight and logistics industry in Myanmar. ■

WWII sites called most popular in Katha Tourist Zone

ENGLISH and Japanese tourists primarily visit sites of famous World War II events in the Katha Tourist Zone, according to officials.

"Most English, American and Japanese tourists are interested in the Katha Tourist Zone. They are, in fact, the relatives of soldiers who fought battles which took place during World War II. So, relatives of soldiers visit Katha, where their grandparents served", said U Nyo Ko Naing, the secretary of the Katha Region Heritage Protection Association.

The Katha tourism zone includes Katha, Indaw and Banmauk Townships, and is expected to be extended to other townships.

"Tourists are interested to visit these three townships. Due to well-known literature, tourists visit some of the famous places described in the novel "Burmese Days", written by George Orwell.

Tourists visiting remote towns can be seen with maps describing locations from the novel", said U Nyo Ko Naing.

"Some tourists are here to have a look at the sites from Operation Thursday launched in 1944. Also, tourists are interested in visiting Man Htuang village, which was built from parts of airplane bodies in Bamauk Township. "Some parts of airplanes are still found in those areas. White City was also constructed in Katha Township. In 2016, No 77 Brigade Commander erected a memorial stone, in cooperation with the Myanmar government", noted U Nyo Ko Naing.—Myo Win Tun (Monywa)

A machine makes water out of air - Watergen's atmospheric water generator

HANOI (Viet Nam) — Imagine you could quench your thirst with water that doesn't originate from a river, spring or lake, but comes directly out of the blue sky, from the air that surrounds you. What sounds like a science fiction movie is already a reality, and it is potentially for everyone.

The new technology, developed by Watergen, an Israel-based tech company, is currently being showcased in Viet Nam's capital city Hanoi. And this is how the air-to-water magic happening inside the machine works: The atmospheric water generator takes in ambient air through a filter, and cools at its dew point, extracting water through condensation. The water is then purified, mineralized, and is ready and safe to drink.

Drinking water for homes, buildings and whole villages

Watergen's medium scale generator GEN-350 can produce an average of 600 liters of clean drinking water per day. It comes with a built-in reservoir and a water treatment system. In Viet Nam, with its high air humidity, the machine can extract even more water, says Watergen President Michael Mirilashvili: "Here in Viet Nam, in the three locations where we tested the technology, it performed even better than we expected."

A large scale unit can extract up to 5000 liters per day. It is designed to provide water to approximately 2500 people per day, and it can be installed on a rooftop and connected directly to the building's water grid. A small generator, GENNY, can provide drinking water for homes and offices, it generates 25 to 30 liters per day. The machines only need electric infrastructure to operate, and can be installed anywhere.

Watergen wants to take its technology even further: "Our scientists already developed the technology that implements the Watergen core technology inside cars, busses, trains and all kinds of transportation", Mirilashvili says. The running vehicle will generate the power for the atmospheric water generator, to provide drinking water on the go anywhere at any time. Mirilashvili also points out that the use of atmospheric water generators could drastically reduce plastic waste.

Access to safe water during droughts

In Viet Nam, a country still suffering from water shortages and poor water quality, the demand for clean water solutions is increasing, says Ambassador of Israel to Viet Nam, Nadav Eshcar: "Viet Nam is one of the countries most affected by global warming, suffering from droughts in the South and Central region in recent times. In Israel, we already have solutions, which we are introducing here".

Watergen's generator has already been in use in numerous countries around the globe, in India, the United States, Latin America, China, Russia and several African countries, to name a few. It is also being listed as one of the Technology Pioneers in 2018 by World Economic Forum.

The water generator presented at the event "Israel in the heart of Hanoi" is a gift from Watergen to the Hanoi People's Committee. It will be on display in Ly Thai To square in the city center for a month, allowing Hanoi's citizens to take a sip from the sky.

The exhibition coincides with a celebration of 25 years in diplomatic relations between Israel and Viet Nam. —AFP ■

Worldwide web inventor wants new 'contract' to make web safe

LISBON (Portugal) — The inventor of the worldwide web on Monday called for a "contract" to make internet safe and accessible for everyone as Europe's largest tech event began in Lisbon amid a backlash over its role in spreading "fake news". Some 70,000 people are expected to take part in the four-day Web Summit, dubbed "the Davos for geeks", including speakers from leading global tech companies, politicians and start-ups hoping to attract attention from the over 1,500 investors who are scheduled to attend.

Tech firms now find themselves on the defensive, with critics accusing them of not doing enough to curb the spread of "fake news" which has helped polarise election campaigns around the world and of maximising profits by harvesting data on consumers' browsing habits. British computer scientist Tim Berners-Lee, who in 1989 invented the worldwide web as a way to exchange information, said the internet had deviated from the goals its founders had envisaged. "All kinds of things have things have gone wrong. We have fake news, we have problems with privacy, we have people being profiled and manipulated," he said in an opening address.

Berners-Lee, 63, called on governments, companies and citizens to iron out a "complete contract" for the web that will make the internet "safe and accessible" for all by May 2019, the date by which 50 percent of the world will be online for the first time.

'Going through a funk'

He has just launched Inrupt, a start-up which is building an open source platform called "Solid" which will decentralize the web and allow users to choose where their data is kept, along with who can see and access it.

Solid intends to allow users to bypass tech giants such as Google and Facebook. The two tech giants now have direct influence over nearly three quarters of all internet traffic thanks to the vast amounts of apps and services they own such as YouTube, WhatsApp and Instagram.

Employees of Google, Facebook and other tech giants have in recent months gone public with their regrets, calling the products they helped build harmful to society and overly addictive.

Tech giants are also under fire for having built up virtual monopolies in their areas. Amazon accounts for 93 per cent of all e-book sales while Google swallows up 92 per cent of all European internet-search ad spending.

"I think technology is going through a funk... it's a period of reflection," Web Summit founder and CEO Paddy Cosgrave told AFP. "With every new technology you go through these cycles. The initial excitement of the printed press was replaced in time by a great fear that it was actually a bad thing. Over time it has actually worked out OK." Among those scheduled to speak at the event is Christopher Wylie, a whistleblower who earlier this year said users' data from Facebook was used by British political consultancy Cambridge Analytica to help elect US President Donald Trump — a claim denied by the company. Another tech veteran who has become critical of the sector, Twitter co-founder Ev Williams, will on Thursday deliver the closing address. —AFP ■

MIT researchers develop drone fleet system to find lost hikers in lush forest

WASHINGTON — Researchers from Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) developed an autonomous system for a fleet of drones to collaboratively search lost hikers in forests.

In a paper to be presented at the incoming International Symposium on Experimental Robotics conference, the researchers described the drones using only on-board computation and wireless communication, requiring not GPS, according to MIT's official website.

Helicopters and drones can't get a glimpse through the thick tree canopy and ordinary autonomous drones that can bob and weave through trees demand GPS signals that can be unreliable in forest.

The new technique equipped each quadrotor drone with laser-range finders for position estimation, localization, and path planning.

The drone can create its own 3-D map of the terrain. Algorithms help it recognize unexplored and already-searched spots, so it knows when it's fully mapped an area.

Then, an off-board ground station combines individual maps from multiple drones into a global 3-D map that can be monitored by human rescuers.

When located, the drone would tag the hiker's location on the global map and rescuers could then use this information to plan a rescue mission.

"Essentially, we're replacing humans with a fleet of drones to make the search part of the search-and-rescue process more efficient," said the paper's first author Tian Yulun, a graduate student at MIT.

The researchers tested multiple drones in simulations of randomly generated forests, and tested two drones in a forested area within NASA's Langley Research Centre.

In both experiments, each drone mapped a roughly 20-square-metre area in about two to five minutes and collaboratively fused their maps together in real-time. —Xinhua ■

Midfielder Maung Maung Lwin wants Myanmar to reach AFF Suzuki Cup semifinals

MYANMAR midfielder Maung Maung Lwin is poised to give it everything he can help his side reach the AFF Suzuki Cup semi-finals for the second successive tournament.

The 23-year-old Yangon United player was part of the team that produced the country's best ever performance at the AFF Suzuki Cup when they reached the 2016 semifinals. But Myanmar was defeated by champions Thailand in the semifinals.

The midfielder was part of Myanmar's U-23 side that recently returned from the Asian Games in Indonesia after putting on a strong showing that saw them finish level on four points with continental powerhouses Iran and Saudi Arabia, as well as DPR Korea. Myanmar had only to exit by the narrowest of margins because of a low-grade goal difference.

Maung Maung Lwin scored in the draw with the Koreans and the tournament is likely to have instilled further confidence ahead of the hotly anticipated AFF Suzuki Cup, where many of the players that lined up in Indonesia will turn out for their nation at senior level.

In 2016, I didn't expect to be in the line-up at all," admitted Maung Maung Lwin, who has scored two goals for his country since making his debut in 2015.

"Our first match was against Viet Nam [at home] and we lost 2-1, but it was such a sensational feeling. We tried our best to get to the semi-finals, which we managed to do, before we lost to Thailand and unfortunately had to leave the tournament. "I was very happy that we could get that far and now, in 2018, we will again be giving it everything we have to be part of the semi-finals", said Maung Maung Lwin. —Htut Htut (Twantay) ■

Myanmar wins over Cambodia with 11-2 in second Futsal match of AFF MNC Futsal Championship 2018

MYANMAR Futsal men's squad won over Cambodia with a larger margin of 11-2 in its second Futsal match of AFF MNC Futsal Championship 2018 held at Yogyakarta, Indonesia on 6 November.

No sooner did the match start than Myanmar put more one-sided pressure on its opponents' Cambodia because Myanmar has been in badly need of more goals. Naing Lin Tun Kyaw, Pyae Phyo Maung (2) and Pyae Phyo Maung (3) scored three goals each for Myanmar and Kyaw Soe Moe, Aung Zin Oo, Nyein Min Soe and Naing Ye Kyaw one goal each. Cambodia gave two equalizers. Myanmar is now in badly need of more goals because it lost to host Indonesia in the first match by more goals.

At the post-press conference, head coach U Htay Myint said "All our players tried to the best of their ability throughout the match. In spite of not seeing a number of goals we want, I am satisfied with the performance of the players. We need to try to see a win against Malaysia. We will have to watch video on matches Malaysia had played. We will have to mend the blunders in the matches we played while we are watching videos on the matches we played." —Htut Htut (Twantay) ■
